

Crisis Response Services

Crisis Response programs provide short term intermediate level of care services when individuals with developmental disabilities are at risk of involuntary hospitalization or homelessness because of behavioral, psychiatric or situational variables. Comprehensive services include residential services, professional collaboration, behavioral consultation, community resource development, and advocacy services.

Target Population: Individuals with an intellectual disability who are at risk for referral to an out-of-home placement or involuntary commitment to a Behavioral Health and Health Facilities (BBHMF) state or diversion psychiatric hospital, and individuals who are ready to return to the community from a BBHMF state or diversion psychiatric hospital, or Crisis Stabilization Unit; with priority given to individuals who do not have a funding source for the specified services, and/or individuals without a designated provider of services

Adult crisis sites have two components:

Residential Services which provide:

Individualized services are provided at the level of necessary intensity to achieve and maintain stability in an integrated, community-based setting.

Services may include:

- Provision of temporary housing (i.e., crisis shelter) with an individualized service plan
- Behavioral assessment to understand and identify behaviors that drive crisis situations
- Establishing guidelines for parents and caregivers to manage difficult behaviors
- Consultation to the treatment team
- Assessment and/or service coordination to assist in treatment planning and accessing long-term services for individuals who do not have service coordination
- Attendance at regional clinical review teams.
- Educational programming
- Access to medical treatment
- Recreational opportunities

Resource Coordination Services that include:

- Assisting with identification of the resources needed to decrease the risk of inappropriate admissions to out of home placements (e.g., psychiatric hospitals, in state residential placements or out of state placements), and integrate the individuals into the most integrated setting possible.
- Conducting thorough research to find appropriate solutions for families.
- Advocating for the individual or family to achieve desired results.
- Developing and maintaining effective relationships through effective and timely communication.
- Development of an immediate safety plan, if necessary.
