

After the Storm

Tips for Parents of Youth

After a disaster, it is normal to feel stressed, anxious, sad, mad, or guilty. Those who lose loved ones, homes, or jobs may not only experience these emotions, but also have trouble sleeping, eating, or concentrating. Some even develop thoughts of suicide. If you, a friend, or a family member feel like giving up or killing yourself, it is important to talk to someone you trust as soon as possible. Getting care and support can help these symptoms subside in a few days or weeks.

How can I get help?

Call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline 1-800-273-TALK (1-800-273-8255)

How do I know if someone needs help?

Many problems can cause people to think about suicide (killing oneself); therefore, it is important to recognize the warning signs in yourself, your friends, or your family members. These signs could include:

- Acting Restless
- Giving up on daily tasks
- Use of alcohol or drugs
- Withdrawing from friends and family
- Dramatic mood changes

What can I do if I am upset?

- Stay in touch with family. Be around people who are caring and positive.
- Tell someone you trust what is going on with you. Ask a parent, friend, counselor, doctor, or pastor for help. Talk with them about the stress you feel and problems you are facing.
- Stay active. Go for a walk, a run, or participate in other group activities to stay busy.
- Keep busy. Help others in your community with clean-up and repairs.

For more information visit

<http://www.cdc.gov/ncipc/dvp/Suicide/default.htm>